

Susan Green OTR/L is a highly respected pediatric occupational therapist with more than 35 years of clinical experience dedicated to improving outcomes for children and families. She specializes in motor development, feeding disorders, and sensory integration, and is widely recognized for her depth of expertise in complex pediatric developmental needs.

Susan has pursued extensive advanced training in feeding therapy, sensory integration, and developmental treatment approaches, allowing her to provide comprehensive, evidence-informed intervention across a broad range of childhood diagnoses. Her clinical work reflects a strong commitment to functional, family-centered care and early intervention.

For over 25 years, she owned and operated in partnership with her husband, Chautauqua Physical Therapy, Occupational Therapy, and Speech-Language Pathology in Jamestown, New York. Under her leadership, the practice expanded to three outpatient clinics serving families throughout Chautauqua County. Most recently, she launched a specialized sensory gym for children ages 0–8, designed to provide developmentally rich, play-based therapeutic experiences for children with a wide variety of developmental, sensory, and motor challenges with The Chautauqua Center, Inc.

In addition to her clinical leadership, Susan is a dedicated educator and mentor. She provides continuing education opportunities within the community and to local schools and colleges and collaborates nationally through the NTI Upstream education team, sharing best practices in pediatric therapy, feeding, and sensory integration.

Her presentations are known for blending deep clinical expertise with practical strategies, making her a sought-after speaker for professionals seeking to elevate pediatric therapy services and outcomes.
